[Written for the Daily Dispatch.] Death. Ch! what a solemu power has death!
Earth's treasures are his own;
He rules and robs our ev'ry breath,
And makes us sigh and groan.
He cares for neither youth nor age,
Nor spares he rich or poor;
But, with his mournful equipage,
Moves on from door to door.

When all is life, and no one dreams
That shafts of death are sped.
They come like passing meteors' gleams
And class us with the dead.
Our loves and joys anspended swing
Upon this spectre's nod.
Whose will evokes the sharpest sting
And sends our souls to God. Death makes our expectations vain, And but defusive snares, That becken forth some pang or pain

The take us unawares.
This spectral shape controls the world
And at his stern behest
All things to chaos can be hurl'd
And laid in dust to rest.

Like ships at ses, we roam the main,
Obedient to the storm;
And may not come to port again
In either shape or form.
We may, perchance, sink in life's sea,
When scarce a billow rolls;
And wreck'd and ruin'd we may be,
Or lost with Satan's souls.

Grim Death can waft us to a deep Grim Death can wait us to a deep
Where anchor ne'er was cast;
And whence no reck'ning we can keep
Of sailing slow or fast.
These depths of darkness no one knows,
There plummet never feel!
But there, 'its said, are sent God's foes
As denizens of hell...

Again, 'tis told to us as true,
That Death has no alarms
For any pious, godly crew
That bear Christ's coat of arms.
Begirt with this proud panoply,
We may in triumph sing.
"Oh. Grave! where is thy victory!
Ob, Death! where is thy sting!"

The Mandolinata. [William W. Story, in Blackwood's for July.]

The night is vill, the windows are open,
The sir with odors is sweet;
Hark I some one is humming the Mandolinata
Along the open street.
The Mandolinata! Ab me! as I bear it, Before me you seem to rive From the other world, with your gentle presence, Your tender and smiling eyes.

How we tested together, and hummed together
That old and inreadbare song,
With forced intonations and quaint affectations,
That ended in laughter long!
How oft in the morning beneath your window
I framed to it baniering words.
And heard from within your sweet voice answer
With a flute-tone like a bird's. And you opened your shutters and sang, "Good morning,

O Troubadour, galiant and gay!"
And I chanted, "O lovely and lazy lady,
I die of this long delay!
Oh. hasten. hasten!" "I'm coming, I'm coming,
Thy lady is coming to thee";
And then you drew back in your chamber laughing—
Oh, who were so foolish as we?

Ah me! that vision comes up before me; Eow vivid and young and gay! Ere Death like a sudden blast blew on you And swept life's blossoms away.
Buoyant of spirit, and glad and happy,
And gentle of thought and heart;
Ah! who would believe you were mortally wounded So bravely you played your part? We veiled our fears and our apprehensions

With hopes that were all in vain; It was only a sudden cough and spasm It was only a sudd a cough and spasin
Betrayed the inward pain.
In the midst of our jesting and merry laughter
We turned aside to sigh,
Looked out of the window, and all the landscape
Grew dim to the brimming eye.

And at last, one pleasant summer morning, When roses were all in bloom, Death gently came with the wandering breezes To bear your spirit home.
A smile on your lips—a tender greeting— And all that was once so gay
Was still and calm, with a perfect sadness, And you had passed away.

Through the casement the wind is moaning, On the pane the ivy crawls, The fire is faded to ashes. And the black brand, broken, fa'ls.

The voices are gone, but I linger,
And slience is over all;
Where ouce there was music and laughter Stands Death in the empty hall.

There is only a dead rose lying, Faded and crushed on the floor; And a harp whose strings are broken, That Love will play no more.

The second happened about two years ment, "There's a big snake in the passage." Ordinarily a snake out of doors is not a very dreadful affair; but the idea of baving one in the house with you, and at night, too, is calculated to produce some excitement. No sooner was the alarm given than all bands rushed into the hall, and there on the stairs, almost directly under the ball-lamp, was a huge blacksnake, apparently on his way down. Seeing a commotion, his snakeship titude of defiance. Any one looking in at that moment might have seen us (some seven or eight in number) drawn up in line of battle along the middle of the hall, confronting the reptile, that had now moved forward between the spokes of the railing until his head projected over the edge of

Still, up to this time no weapons had been procured and no provision made for exterminating the monster. Suddenly glancing around, I spied the door-bar, and, selzing it, I opened the contest by making a vigorous thrust, which was ineffective. At the same instant the snake made such a lunge forward that he lost his equilibrium and tumbled headlong right into the midst of us. The excitement was now at its height; the females shricked wildly, I fought desperately, and the rest encouraged and cheered heartily; but my weapon was so obstinately straight that I could only strike the floor beyond with the end of it leaving the snake untouched. His snakeship seemed to be thrown into confusion by his late fall, so be commenced a hasty retreat towards the front door, all our forces fol-lowing in hot pursuit. Finally, when he had nearly reached the door, we succeeded in dealing a fatal blow, and he succumbed, not, however, until he had made some des-

Mr. Thomas Pottridge, of Smallborough, had been renowned in his native town for his constant run of luck, so that at the age tridge ended by thinking that he could best secure his object by causing himself to be reflected mayor, and arranging, if possible, that H. R. H. the Prince of Wales should pay a visit to Smallborough during the term his office. Intent upon this scheme, Mr. Pottridge came up to town to call upon Lord Beaconsfield. Lord Beaconsfield hearkened kindly to the grocer's prayer. Smallborough was about to inaugurate some public baths, the first establishment of the kind ever seen in the town, and nothing could be more suitable than that the heir to the throne should preside over the ceremonial. "Truly," said the Premier po-litely, when he had heard the alderman speak, "the cleanliness of the people must always be a matter of interesting concern to those who are brought into relations with them. I shall be happy to take her Majesrited proposal which you have laid before "If you can manage it, my Lord, I should be glad if the visit could take place some time after the 9th of November next, for I shall be mayor then, and able to see that the reception given is a proper one."

Leaving Whitehall, Mr. Pottridge sauntered towards Regent street, and as he walked along life seemed rosy to him because of Miss Dott. He began to stare into the shop-windows, admiring pretty things which be was tempted to buy for his love. He was turning over this fancy and fumbling magistrate bimself, he knew what shifts wistfully at the pocket where his check-book lay, when suddenly he beheld through the offenders from justice, and so far as he was window a curious sight. "Now, that woman must have capacious pockets," soliloquized evidence against the wife of Lord Keynthe astonished Mr. Pottridge. "She's a cunning thief, anyhow, and I'll just step in and warn the firm."

He besitated a moment, and whilst he hovered about the doorway the lady came out escorted by an obsequious commissionaire with medals on his breast. A footman, one of a row basking on a bench like ovsters, rose and signalled to the coachman of a handsomely-appointed brougham, who at once drove forward. Evidently this lady was not an ordinary thief. One would think that in a case where the offence was flagrant and the testimony so clear the magistrate might have sentenced the defendant straight off to six months' imprisonment, and, indeed, had the thief been a person of the lower orders it would probably have been her fate to be convicted summarily. But it turned out that Pounceforth-Keane was the real name of the elegant shoplifter, whose husband was a per son moving, as reporters say, "in the best ranks of society." Mr. Pounceforth-Keane was sent for, and arrived breathless in a hansom from one of the best clubs in Pal Mall. At the sight of him his wife, who had been locked up for an hour in a police cell, wept profusely, and Mr. P.-K. was himself much agitated. He asked for a remand, and tendered bail, saying he should produce medical evidence to the effect that his wife had lately suffered severely in his wife had lately suffered severely in health. Meeting Mr. Bungs, the brewer, near the railway station, he gave him an account of what had happened, and was hearkened to with sympathy until he mentioned the name of Pounceforth-Keane. Then Mr. Bungs pursed up his ips. "Why, bless me, that's the cousin of Lord Keynsole, brother-in-law of our Lord

On the morrow of his adventure in London, Mr. Chuckleworth, the principal solicitor in the town, who was Lord Keynsole's legal adviser, passed him in the street without nodding, and later in the day Mrs. Chuckleworth sent a stiff note begging that Mr. Pottridge would send in his bill, and dark person of about thirty, superbly intimating that she would thenceforth pur-dressed, and very handsome.
